hi rabbit

i saw reference to this last night and looked around a bit. i see you guys have an official corporate-sponsored tank. folks at the convention next year will appreciate that, i'm sure.

the police are just following the playbook. it doesn't do you any good to be outraged, or even surprised. this is how they are going to respond. you guys need to be aware of that, and plan your activities accordingly. don't make your activities about "occupy vs the police". that path goes round in circles.

occupy is about so much more than that.

but we know that the police are going to respond like this. the current model for policing protests, post-seattle 99, is to be selective about respecting the right to assemble and the right to free speech. the selective nature makes it very difficult if not impossible for protest organizers to know exactly how to plan events. this is a direct response on the part of police forces to the leaderless, horizontal model of organization developed during the alter globalism events of late-90s - early-00s. the folks participating in the occupy gatherings are generally being smart about all of this, but they do at times seem to be operating as if they were in an earlier context, when police response to large protests was based on a very different model.

that said, protesters need to act to prevent their events from becoming primarily about conflicts with the police. this is the responsibility of the protesters, not of the police.

and, again, having said that, i think it is useful for those of us living in the united states to compare police actions here to the police/military actions in egypt and syria.

large, spectacular clashes with the police are a waste of resources on all sides. the occupy movement is not primarily about the relationship of the people to the police. if actions of the occupiers lead to conflicts with police forces, then it is the choice of the occupiers to permit the movement to be framed as such, and i don't see how that can be construed as desirable or even useful.

this is not a serious proposal. congress is a symptom of the problem. buffet knows the approval rate for congress is at an all time low, so he can safely offer its members as scapegoats. if we were to fix the plutocratic, corporatist structure of our current system of representative government, which would entail removing buffet and the elites he represents from the electoral process, then we could begin to elect representatives who would represent the people. of course, buffet is not going to propose anything of the sort. i am not going to forward this to anyone. if this idea deserves to be passed around at all, it should only be in the form of a critique. buffet thinks he can divert our attention, assist us in blowing off a little misdirected steam, and then we can all get back to business as usual. the elites will still own the congress.
